Compelling Preaching

USCDornsife
Center for Religion and Civic Culture

The Compelling Preaching Initiative at the USC Center for Religion and Civic Culture seeks to create space for faith leaders to think about their preaching in an ever-changing social and cultural landscape.

In CRCC's conversation with faith leaders, they have voiced concerns about how their sermons fit into a world characterized by declining religious participation and cultural and political polarization. They expressed a desire to figure out how to preach in a way that engages their members and connects with the rest of their ministries. CRCC sees preaching as one way faith leaders can bring their core values to bear on efforts to improve the communities that they serve.

The following pages include bios for members of a diverse cohort of Christian preachers in Southern California. The program for this cohort will focus on the advanced praxis of the art and craft of preaching, as well as training on how preachers can bring their message beyond the four walls of their congregations through media and OpEd writing. Discussions and programs allow participants to link theology to important issues that affect the lives of church members and their communities.

Each cohort member will have the opportunity to establish a working group of preachers interested in supporting one another.

Program information for cohort members can be found at crcc.usc.edu/compelling-preaching-cohort-program

The Compelling Preaching initiative is supported by a generous grant from the Lilly Endowment.

Sithy Bin
Faith-Rooted Organizer
CLUE Justice

I am Sithy Bin, a former Cambodian refugee who found redemption and purpose through my faith in Jesus Christ. After making poor decisions growing up, I faced the consequences of those choices, one of which was incarceration. I emerged from that experience as a passionate servant-leader devoted to empowering others through ministry and community outreach. As a preacher and pastor, my mission is to creatively and authentically proclaim the Gospel in ways that transform lives. Drawing from my own journey of brokenness and renewal, I aim to communicate God's truth with clarity, compassion and conviction.

Beyond the pulpit, I co-founded the Made New Foundation to provide support and second chances for the reentry community. I also mentor at-risk youth and advocate for the rights of immigration detainees. My story is a testament to the power of God's restorative love. By His grace, I've gone from being an outcast to becoming a voice of hope, using my life to inspire positive change in this world.

Tommy Pickens

*Pastor
Antelope valley Christian Center*

I love people and have patience in my love for people. I am very ambitious and don't like mediocrity. I love to inspire people to accomplish more than they may believe they can before meeting them. I have learned to be real with myself and others opposed to faking for putting on a mask to hide my hurts, pains and fears. I don't know what quit means and look to find a way to win in what I am doing. I love comfortable environments and want to foster harmony among every human being. I love traveling and entering new environments and I sometimes have a tough time letting go of seasons in life and things within them. I love my kids and make the mistake of thinking that everyone has solid motives like myself so I have been easily manipulated. I enjoy working hard to be the best or one of the best in life at whatever I am doing.

Eric (E. M.) Williams
 Pastor
 St. Luke Holy Baptist Church

My ministry preparation includes an unusually focused Christian upbringing. My father and pastor of over forty years, Dr. R. C. Williams Sr., and nurturing Christian mother, Alma Williams, provided an ideal environment for honoring God with and for the gift of children. He shares his calling into the ministry along with seven of eight other siblings.

I announced my calling into the ministry in the local newspaper at age seven; however, it was not until age twenty-seven that I finally accepted the call. At that time, I fully submitted myself to the hands of God in preparing me for ministry. My formal preparations include attending San Diego State University, earning and receiving two undergraduate degrees from the former Linda Vista Bible College & Seminary (Southern California Seminary) and Christian Heritage College, Masters of Divinity degree from Bethel Theological Seminary, entering my Doctoral Ministry at Bethel University and completion of Doctoral Ministry at degree from Faith Seminary.
